RESEARCH EXPERIENCE

The Orbis Cyber-Sight retina experience, 2003-2012

Principal Investigator (PI), December 2011-present

- In this retrospective, consecutive case-series, the goal was to determine the utility of the web-based Orbis Cyber-Sight mentoring network for retinal cases. Data gathered from this study will assist in the development of a retinal educational curriculum for participating Orbis members in the future.

Mobile technology in medical education: Analysis of student utilization of mobile devices and their perceptions

Principal Investigator, March 2011-November 2011

- Surveys were used to assess how students at UCF COM use mobile devices and applications to enhance their medical education.

A comparison of curricular versus extracurricular multicultural experiences: Effect on first and second year medical student cultural competency

Co-Investigator (PI: Elona Rrapo), March 2011-November 2011

- Surveys were administered to students at UCF COM to determine the student perception of the efficacy of the curriculum and extracurricular activities in promoting cultural competency.

Highlighting the innovative anatomy experience at UCF COM

Co-Investigator (PI: Jennifer Bazemore), March 2011-November 2012

- Surveys were administered to students of UCF COM to determine student perceptions of their anatomy lab experience and the utility of technology in integrating anatomy with physiology, radiology, and histology. Innovations at UCF COM include: CT scans of cadavers to correlate findings with dissection, large touch-screen computers with digital dissection manuals, and ultrasound machines.

The effects of phentolamine on cerebral hemodynamics during selective cerebral perfusion at deep hypothermia in the neonatal pig model

Principal Investigator, December 2009-November 2011

- Conducted in conjunction with Arnold Palmer Hospital, the study was part of the FIRE module. Mentor: William DeCampi, MD, PhD
- The purpose of this animal study was to determine the effects of a continuous infusion of phentolamine during selective cerebral perfusion on cerebral vascular resistance, oxygen metabolism and neuronal integrity.

Water purification as a preventive public health measure in the Dominican Republic

Co-Investigator (PI: Akash Parekh), May 2008-April 2009

- In this study, water assessment surveys were administered in three isolated mountainous villages that have limited access to potable water in order to determine incidence of diarrheal illness and community perceptions of water contamination. As a result of the study, over 120 families were given access to simple, sustainable water filtration systems.
